What if I told you the most profitable product in history isn't oil, gold, or technology, it's debt?

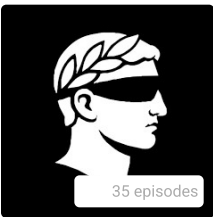

From clay tablets in Mesopotamia to the Dutch bond markets, from the Bank of England to Wall Street, debt has been carefully engineered into the foundation of our financial system. It funds wars, props up governments, drives consumer culture, and quietly transfers wealth from the many to the few.

This video traces the hidden history of debt: how it became the backbone of empires, how the IMF and World Bank turned it into a tool of global control, how consumer credit turned ordinary families into permanent customers, and why today's economy cannot function without it. Debt isn't just a contract — it's a product designed to profit endlessly, turning your future into someone else's income stream.

Understanding this history is financial education at its core. Because once you see how debt really works, you'll never look at a mortgage, a credit card, or a government deficit the same way again.

"Efficiency for the creditor means less freedom for the debtor". That really resonates.

People used to pay cash for stuff and things were cheaper when people paid cash. Company s figured out they could charge more if it was financed.

What people call "money" is all debt. Here in the United States of America, we have Federal Reserve Notes, which aren't "money" legally speaking. A Federal Reserve Note is a Promissory Note, which is a Promise to Pay, or as I call it, an IOU. Debt-based fiat currency.

Wow that was so clearly outlined. You have a real skill is being able to break down complex systems and make them easy to understand.

I'd like to hear more about central banks.

In Islam, Riba (dealing in interest) is one of the worst sins. It is even worse than the likes of adultery.

As a kid I always questioned that.. why would god make such a benign thing so severely punishable..
